GEOLOGYOF GREATER NEWYORK

MAP SOON TO BE ISSUED BY THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

New York Harbor Formed in Past Geologic Times by the Sinking of the Land -Non-Metallic Resources of the City and Vicinity-Brick and Pottery Clays.

WASHINGTON, March 1.—The United States Geological Survey, in cooperation with the States of New Jersey and New York, is about to issue the New York City Geologic Folio, No. 83, which covers one-fourth of equare degree, equivalent in this latitude to $05.27 square miles. The map is divided into four atlas sheets, called the Paterson, Harlem, Brooklyn, and Staten Island sheets. New York's commerce depends upon the relation of land and sea. Were the land raised a hundred feet the waterways would secome unnavigable streams and the shore line would retreat far out beyond Sandy Hook; were the land sunk a few fathome Manhattan Island would be changed to a group of islets and reefs. In past geologic times, as the writers of the Folio tell us, the waters of the East River and of the Hudson joined below a bold hill where now is the Battery, and flowing out through the Narrows, crossed a wide plain to the ocean through the old channel which is still traceable by soundings. When the land sank to its present level, the valleys were submerged, and the harbor of New York re-

In a past still more remote a salt water sea, the Appalachian, had reached from the St. Lawrence embayment, passing west of New York, far to the southwest, afterward extending its northwestern shore to Wisconsin, its southwestern shore probably lying east of the present Atlantic coast; and then, where this sea had been, there gradually arose the present range of the Appalachian Mountains.

Then there came a time when the dominent feature was the glaciation of northern North America and Europe. Ice sheets spread from different centres, not only once, but three or more times, and an appreciable interval of milder climate separated each succeeding ice advance from the preceding one. The total area of the North American ice sheet at the time of its maximum development has been estimated at about 4,000,000 square miles, or about ten times the estimated area of the present ice field of Greenland. All of the New York district, except the southernmost part of the Brooklyn quadrangle and a small area in the southeastern part of Staten Island, was covered by the continental ice sheet of the last glacial eroch:

tinental ice sheet of the last glacial epoch; and, though it be an old story to geologists, the average New Yorker will learn with interest that the terminal moraine of rocks and other material left by this ice sheet is the "backbone" of Long Island and has controlled the formation of the island. Although the vicinity of New York city can hardly be regarded as an important mining district, its mineral resources are a source of considerable wealth. It is true that with the exception of one small iron mine no metals are mined within or adjoining the city limits, but the non-metallic products amount in the aggreiron mine no metals are mined within or adjoining the city limits, but the non-metallic products amount in the aggregate to an imposing total of value.

The rocks described in the New York Folio as furnishing supplies of building stone and road metal are gneiss, granite, trap and marble. Of these, the most familiar to the average New Yorker will probably be the trap rock, so largely used as macadam for streets and roads. It is procured from numerous quarries located on Staten Island and in the Palisades, extending on the New Jersey shore of the Hudson from Jersey City as far north as Nyack, N. Y. The reader may be interested to learn that it is of volcanic origin and that the material now composing the elifs of the Palisades was once, while in a molten state, pushed up through the red sandstone which can be seen at Fort Lee and other points on the river front.

The gneisses and granites which are described in the New York Folio are also of igneous origin, but they never reached the earth's surface, so that they cooled more slowly than did the trap rock. In consequence, the granites are of coarser grain than the trap. In the economic geology portion of the Folio it is stated that numerous quarries are opened in the vicinity of Yonkers, Dunwoodie, New Rochelle geology portion of the Folio it is stated that numerous quarries are opered in the vicinity of Yonkers. Dunwoodie, New Rochelle and Larchmont and that the gneiss and granite extracted at these points are very handsome and durable stones.

The marble quarries at Tuckahoe and Sing Sing are described in particular detail, as they furnish a stone known all along the Atlantic coast from New York as far south as Savannah—the United States Custom House in the latter city being built of Tuckahoe marble. The New York Life and the Home Life buildings, and the Clark mansion at Eightieth street and Riverside drive, were built recently of marble from these quarries.

An interesting rock of curious appearance is the so-called serpentine, found near fixtieth street and Eleventh avenue, and also at Hoboken and New Rochelle, and on staten Island. It is a dull olive green in color, and has been utilized effectively in a number of buildings in Hoboken and New Rochelle, but its softness is rather against it.

Aside from the building stones thus described in the New York Folio, mineral products of less importance are found near the city. Of these may be mentioned the brick and pottery clays of Staten and Long stands; the iron ore of Staten Island; and the sands and gravels, found at many points in the vicinity, which are much used for attructural purposes.

Mourning Millinery from Paris First Display of Spring Models

MOURNING MILLINERY is necessarily black, and, under ordinary treatment, sombre and unpleasing. Attempts at radical departure in the past have been unsuccessful; and the dead level of tasteful mediocrity has contented most designers.

Among those whose work has been distinguished in this field the foremost has been Mangin Maurice. Another specialist in mourning models is Madame Griotteray. But perhaps the most important productions to be seen this season are those of Madame Germaine, who after large success in colored millinery has this season, for the first time, applied her skill and genius to producing beautiful models in Mourning Millinery. Her hats are distinctly original, unquestionably beautiful, and in unimpeachable good taste.

These three foremost designers of Mourning Millinery—Mangin Maurice, Madame Griotteray and Madame Germaine—have supplied the Hats which form the interesting showing which we announce today. The new ways of draping a mourning veil on hat or bonnet, as exhibited by the models of Mangin Maurice, is an interesting feature of the exhibit.

The CHINA Comes In

The Great March Sale Begins Today

RECORD-BREAKING February Furniture Sale ended on Saturday. Today the interest of ambitious and thrifty housekeepers passes from the Fourth floor to the Basement, where is assembled the representative showing of the broadest and best offerings of China, Cut Glass Bric-a-Brac that have ever been presented to the New York public.

This bold announcement is made advisedly. It is not capable of refutation. A year ago the public response to our March Sale offerings was so great that we didn't have sufficient goods to supply the demands. This year we made no such error, unless your increasing demands again

And if it were possible for the whole public to realize what this Sale offers, even the vast stocks piled up for this Sale would vanish away in a week, if our facilities could handle the demand. Our work for this occasion began last Summer, and has been constant ever since.

Never have we shown a more varied assortment in Dinner Ware. In New York alone we open this Sale with over one thousand Dinner Sets in stock, with as many more on order, varying in price from $6 to $265. America, England, Austria and France, all have sent magnificent collections. There is not an old set in the whole collection. In Fancy China Pieces we show hundreds of new decorations, styles and shapes, from a China Plate or Cup and Saucer neatly decorated, at 10c; to an elaborate Punch Bowl at $100.

In Cut Glass we have excelled even ourselves. Commanding the large outlets we do, and controlling one large factory and practically several others, and keeping them working full time during dull seasons enable us to put on our counters the newest and best cuttings at one small profit above actual cost of production.

In Bric-a-Brac several large shipments have reached us from the leading European factories. Goods purchased in immense quantities at half prices and less. Our selling prices on these goods this month will be found phenomenally low. Of course, the early purchaser will find the greater choice. In Jardinieres, Toilet Ware, Umbrella Stands we show great variety at prices unmatched for
